Self-Help Housing

In the program, participants save money and earn "sweat equity" toward their new home by completing 65% of the labor. Self-Help brings together a group of four to six qualifying families to work cooperatively to build their homes under the guidance of a construction supervisor. Using this method, homeowners reduce construction costs and build immediate equity in their homes. All homes are financed with low-interest Rural Home Loans, which further improves the homes' affordability. No construction experience is required. Our construction supervisor will assist you through the process.
